India is a story of growth and opportunity. India's sustained growth of around 8% in 2008 and growing dynamism in several of its regional markets have created wide and diverse business prospects for U.S. exporters and investors. Many smaller American firms have begun to view India as a top market for their products and services as well. In 2008, U.S. exports to India surged to $18.6 Billion, an increase of 80% in comparison to 2006.

Three highly qualified speakers, one from the Consulate General of India in New York City, the second from The M-V Group, a leading market developer which supports international companies as they nurture and increase sales volumes in India and the third from AMRI Global (formerly Albany Molecular Research Inc.), which has a strong presence in India, will describe how Tech Valley businesses can tap into the dynamic Indian market.
